NAME

ADDRESS

The number I rested the preoccupations and concerns of the African continent from 1960 to 1990. This was the period during which the University Press in Durban published a rich array of books on African studies by African scholars. Even in the 1970s, in the midst of unparalleled expansion of secondary and tertiary education, publishers were among only a few in the world to keep their traditional market in line with the new academic trends. In the 1980s, as the continent's voice was heard, publishers were scrambling to catch up. It is no surprise that the number of books on South African history and culture has increased. But despite this, the question remains: can we publish, as the head of a press, the University Press in Durban, publish books that reflect the richness of African culture and history in a way that is accessible to a wider audience?

I am delighted to announce that the University Press in Durban has been awarded a Gold Medal by the South African Book Awards for its publication of "The African World: A History of African Literature". This is the first time in the history of the South African Book Awards that a pressing has won a Gold Medal. The award is a testament to the commitment of the University Press in Durban to publishing books that reflect the richness of African culture and history in a way that is accessible to a wider audience. It is a fitting recognition of the commitment of the University Press in Durban to publishing books that reflect the richness of African culture and history in a way that is accessible to a wider audience.
