PUBLICATION GUIDELINES:
We ask contributors to submit two (2) typed copies, following the format (on such issues as references and notes) of articles in this issue of TRANSFORMATION. Whilst the journal will cater for work at any level of abstraction, or detail, a number of criteria will guide the editors in selection of material for inclusion. Articles should aim for academic rigour but also clarify the political implications of the issues discussed. We are concerned not to compete with other South African journals that may cover related ground but in different ways – this will govern our selection principles. All articles will be assessed anonymously by the referees. Contributions should preferably not exceed the following lengths:

- Analytical articles: 7000 words
- Debates, comment and review articles: 3000 words

The views expressed in TRANSFORMATION do not necessarily reflect those of the editors.

Articles
Linda Chisholm and Elaine Unterhalter examine the theoretical and methodological perspectives which have characterised recent research on education and gender in South Africa and some of the policies informed by these approaches being developed at national and provincial level. They also discuss some of the important silences in this research area and the problems that could arise from these gaps.

Education and Training for the Informal Sector: reflections on an international research project
Simon McGrath discusses the results of a review of education and training interventions impacting on the informal sector which was commissioned by the British Government's then Overseas Development Administration (ODA).

Generational Transition in Union Employment: the organisational implications of staff turnover in COSATU unions
Sakhele Buhlungu examines a new generation of post-apartheid trade union officials' changing approach to traditional labour traditions, practices and politics.
Trade Policy and Industrial Development in Durban

Imraan Valodia explores the literature on international trade in the context of the city of Durban’s industrialisation over the course of the twentieth century.

Commentary

Reviews
Wilmot James and Moira Levy’s edited collection Pulse: passages in democracy-building: assessing South Africa’s transition and Conrad Barbeton, Michael Blake and Hermien Kotze’s edited collection Creating Action Space: the challenge of poverty and democracy in South Africa are reviewed by David Pottie.
Note to Readers

Transformation has made some important changes to the Editorial Board. Mike Morris and Vishnu Padayachee have resigned as editors. They have felt eager to move on to concentrate on other interests and commitments as part of their own transformations. Mike was a founding editor of the journal. His tremendous enthusiasm and energy, his wide contacts and his sense of the changing political scene in South Africa were invaluable to the initial success and continuation of the journal. We will miss his presence and his contribution. Vishnu came on the Board a little later. He has been instrumental especially in making Transformation a voice for alternative economic outlooks and analyses. His sane and steady voice has always been a factor for stability and for quality in the production of the journal and he will be missed just as much. Both will be retained as Founding Editors and we will be calling on them from time to time to help us out.

At the same time, new editors have arrived on the scene. Adam Habib has been with us for some months; he is a political scientist based at the University of Durban-Westville. We have now added four new names. We hope that Imraan Valodia of the Centre for Social and Development Studies, University of Natal, Durban will especially help to strengthen our economic coverage. Monique Marks of UND’s Sociology Department is particularly interested in policing and other aspects of the state-society interface. Keith Breckenridge of the UND History Department and Lindy Stiebel of the UDW English Department will, we hope, open the doors to a far greater coverage of the changing cultural scene. Welcome Imraan, Monique, Keith and Lindy alongside John, Adam and Gerry.
