PUBLICATION GUIDELINES:
We ask contributors to submit two (2) typed copies, following the format (on such issues as references and notes) of articles in this issue of TRANSFORMATION. Whilst the journal will cater for work at any level of abstraction, or detail, a number of criteria will guide the editors in selection of material for inclusion. Articles should aim for academic rigour but also clarify the political implications of the issues discussed. We are concerned not to compete with other South African journals that may cover related ground but in different ways—this will govern our selection principles. All articles will be assessed anonymously by the referees. Contributions should preferably not exceed the following lengths:

- Analytical articles: 8 000 words
- Debates, comment and review articles: 3 000 words

Also see inside back cover ‘Notes for Contributors’.

Organised labour, globalisation and economic reform: union investment companies in South Africa

The transition to democracy and the politics of the post-apartheid regime have opened up the South African economy to investments from Black empowerment companies. One of the first to take up this opportunity have been the union federations who have established a number of for-profit ventures in recent years. Okechukwu C. Iheduru investigates this phenomenon of 'labour capitalism' and assesses its implications for the labour unions and black politics in South Africa.

Legitimacy and generational conflict in the UDF: the struggles behind the struggle

Ineke van Kessel investigates the dynamics of protest and revolt within the UDF through an analysis of three local struggles. This exploration of 'struggles within the struggle' enables an analysis of the interaction between the ideological contents of the national movement and the meanings of local struggles.

Countering public corruption in South Africa

Tom Lodge assesses the state of the literature on, and investigates the post-apartheid government's initiatives against, corruption in South Africa.
Changing Gear? The 2001 budget and economic policy in South Africa

Vishnu Padayachee and Imraan Valodia critically analyse the 2001 budget and assess whether it heralds a new era for economic policy in South Africa.
